

Partnering with Residents and Families to Learn about the Impact of the COVID-19 Pandemic

A First Step for Future Research

INSTITUTE FOR PATIENT- AND FAMILY-CENTERED CARE®

Transforming health care through partnerships

With support from Patient-Centered Outcomes Research Institute (PCORI) for this project, IPFCC is leading a project to encourage residents in long-term care communities and their families to partner with researchers in future research.

The goal of this project is to ensure that future research addresses issues related to managing a pandemic in ways important to residents in long-term care and their families while ensuring safety and quality of life.

IPFCC is partnering with four long-term care communities to learn how changes made during the COVID-19 pandemic have impacted quality of life as a first step for future research.

Residents & Families Needed!

Virtual Small Group Conversations

- The IPFCC Team will facilitate a virtual small group conversation with four residents, and separately, with four family members from your long-term care community.
- They will ask questions about your concerns related to social isolation and loneliness during the COVID-19 pandemic and how changes made during the pandemic impacted your quality of life and well-being.
- Each session will last for one hour and be recorded.
- The support person from your long-term care community will be available to answer any questions you may have.

- We ask that you keep any personal information that is shared confidential to this group.
- No names will be included in the summary of the small group conversations that will be shared with others.
