Relevance: The project is worthwhile (i.e. Research questions are relevant to families and families will be interested in this study and the results)
The study is appropriate to the population that is addressed and it will impact future services

Feasibility: Participant The researcher has considered the participant factors in a realistic and respectful way (i.e. timing and frequency of visits, activities and interventions conducted, participants will be able to complete the requirements of this study)
Feasibility: Family The researcher has considered the families' participation in their study in a realistic and respectful way (i.e. amount and length of parent/ caregiver questionnaires and interviews, parking and travel reimbursement)
There's a clear and appropriate plan to share the findings with families and the general public (i.e. timeline included, how the findings will be shared, the format used etc.)

If this study goes beyond minimum risk, the risks and benefits are clearly articulated and the risk/benefit ratio is appropriate (i.e. the majority of families would be comfortable participating in this study)
